Wild cards in poker are a reference made to cards that can have a variable value as fixed by the casino or the dealer. If the king is declared as a wild card, a player can take whatever value is required for the making of the hand to be the value for the wild card. In short wild cards in poker are like a joker. Wild cards can be used to represent any card suit or rank in poker. This is very useful in creating a very strong hand.

Before any poker game begins the dealer declares the value for the wild card or they let the players use the value that they prefer to use for the wild cards. Joker is the most popular form of wild card. The wildcards in poker are normally the low rank cards high rank cards like Ace and faces are not in most cases used as wildcards in poker. Wild cards in poker can replace the value for any card that the player wants to make a hand. For example, if the player needs 4 kings to make a 4 of a kind he can replace the wild card with the value needed to make the four of a kind. Summing up wildcards in poker are at their best use when the player is given the liberty of replacing it for whatever value they please, but at the same time if the wild card has been designated with select value or select suit value only those players that require a card with such a value will feel lucky with it. In some cases there might be a tie in the final winning in the table, in such cases the tie breaker is decided by considering the value that each player has designated for the wild cards. If both of them have assigned the same value to the wild cards in poker, then the person that has allotted the lowest value to the wild cards in poker makes the winning. In events when there are more than one wildcards the person that has less number of wildcards makes the winning. Using wildcards in poker increases the complexity of the game when it comes to evaluating the value of wild cards in games like stud and razz or in holdem. Wild cards make the game complex and also easy. However, the excitement is never ending.
